Drugstore Update

I get a lot of questions about what is happening at the McGill Drugstore, so here are a few examples. After getting the place washed down, the next step was to paint the walls and ceiling. Bath Lumber matched the paint perfectly.

The next step was to put everything back. I tried to put things where they made the most sense, like all the diplomas etc. above Jerry's desk.

I get a lot of questions about the town itself and so I fixed an area near the front door, so folks could look at some pictures of McGill and get some idea of what was here in relation to KCC , the mill and smelter.

The front window display area was sanded down and painted to look better. Several different items of interest were put on display. I had new wiring put in so that we could have nice holiday displays.

There was a lot of work to be done on the outside. There were a lot of wood that needed to be covered. The small building in the back needed some drip edges and fascia covered with metal.

The wood has all been covered with painted metal siding and painted fascia and drip edges. The outside of the building is now secure for many years.

Drop in for a visit and take a look.

Bank, (McGill Candy Kitchen, Bernstein Clothiers-now antique store), Campton Mercantile-now Bradley's. Circ 1912

The Campton Mercantile was turned around in 1925 and became Goodman-Tidball. The McGill Candy Kitchen was also a news stand.

There was a fire plug in front of the bank.
